

Learning Path

Some teachers can't help it — summer means learning something new. If that's you, lean in. Professional growth doesn't have to feel like homework.

1. Pick one area of genuine curiosity. What have you been wanting to learn more about? Student engagement, restorative practices, literacy? Follow actual interest, not obligation.
2. Read one book cover to cover. An educational book, or anything that expands how you think.
3. Connect with educators outside your school. A summer workshop, a professional community, a conference. TCL offers 2-week summer interactive courses so you can learn while collaborating with other educators.
4. Take a course at your own pace. Just you, a topic that matters to you, and the space to actually sit with new ideas. TCL's self-paced courses offer just that!
5. Build something from what you've learned. A lesson, a framework, a reflection. The best proof of learning is creation. Make something you're proud to bring back in the fall.
